POB Low Vision Learning Center Now Open in DC

POB’s second Low Vision Learning Center, located at our headquarters on Capitol Hill, is now seeing patients! Conveniently located near Union Station, our fully-accessible facility has state-of-the-art equipment to provide a variety of services for people with low vision including examinations, personalized rehabilitation, and information on appropriate resources. Belinda Weinberg, O.D., low vision specialist, is seeing patients on Wednesdays and Thursdays. While the Center accepts Medicare and most major medical insurances, not all aspects of the evaluation are covered, such as the cost of visual aids. For more information, call (703) 652-7803.
Overcoming Travel Woes

The winter season provides opportunities for travel to be with family and friends. The following tips, compiled by the National Research and Training Center on Blindness and Low Vision at Mississippi State University, are designed to help people with low vision enjoy a safe and enjoyable trip:

- Regardless of the method of travel, it is essential that you ask for assistance at each location where you need help, especially if you have multiple legs in your trip.
- When you book a flight, inform the airline of your needs, as this will ensure that they are prepared to offer you services, such as pre-boarding. If you have an issue at the airport, speak to the Complaints Resolution Officer, who must be available at all times.
- Many rail stations have a passenger service office where you can request assistance.
- Many bus companies offer priority seating on-board and assistance storing mobility aids.
- Use a bright ribbon or an audible locator, such as a remote pager, to make identifying your luggage easier.
- To ensure adequate time for navigation and assistance, arrive well in advance of your departure time.

Making Banking More Accessible

Raised-line large-print checks are larger than standard checks, have embossed lines and larger, bolder print, and include a larger check register. Bank statements are often available by request in Braille or large-print formats. To learn more, speak to your bank manager. To help identify paper currency, ask the teller to hand your money to you in separate denominations or ask for your paper money in all of the same denomination. Alternatively, consider purchasing a portable electronic talking money identifier. This device verbally announces the denomination of all paper currency. For more, speak to a customer service representative or manager at your local banking center.
